

This is an invitation to join an intellectual carnival in celebration of literary journalism: “The elegant poetic prose of a reporter who turned the news, his personal observation of human nature and a rare sense of impish humour into an invaluable work of socio-economic, political and historical significance.”

“The essays examine serious, and not so serious social, political, economic, religious etc. problems with such levity that they produce a poignant and humorous effect on their readers. It does what all literature seeks to do – entertain as well as inform.”
